Warren Johnston he has got a good memory and he remembered about our pet mosquito last yr. and he come in with a little pack to Mosquitos and he give it to me and I opened it and all it was was two blocks of wood and the directions says to put the mosquito on one block and hit it with the other. Nobuddy was hurt.

In the army we used to get recipes in the Stars and Stripes for killing cooties and one recipe was to pick off a cootie and lay it on the ground and then walk back twenty paces and throw hand grenades at it and another one was to rub yourself all over with salt and then go to a river and take all your clothes off and the cooties would have at the salt and would be thirsty and they would see the river and rush out of your clothes to get a drink and while they were gone you would pick up your clothes and beat it and the cooties that didn't drown in the water would come back on shore and seeing the clothes gone would die of disappointment.

I tried all them recipes.

Old Bill Stein he was a old regular and the best horseshoer in the A. E. F. (And by the way we used to say that A. E. F. meant After England Failed which ain't to the point at all) but anyway old Bill Stein he had been in so many wars that he was used to being lousy and he had more cooties than any man in France and some of the best ones and one day he was working at his forge getting shoes fitted to nags against a forced march to start that night and a shavetail who was one of them ninety day wonders from the officers training camps he had just been assigned to our outfit and he sees Bill working at the forge and he comes up and says I just come from the States and I ain't never seen a cootie and I understand that this outfit is lousy as a pet coon and Bill says you said it Lootenant and the shavie says have you got cooties and Bill says I'll tell the cockeyed world-I have got cooties and the shavie says let me see one and Bill reaches down in his britches and pulls out a big fat cootie and he lays it on the loot's outstretched palm and the loot he looked at it awful close and careful turning it over on its back with a pencil point and he looked it over for about two minutes while Bill was waiting and after Bill thought he had looked at it long enough he says have you seen it long enough Lootenant and the shavie says yes and Bill picks it off the loot's hand and sticks it back inside his pants and said well all right then I'll take it back, it's the biggest one I got.

Did you ever notice how much Bill the Barber looks like Al Bond and Charle Tansey?

Mother's Day to Be Unhappy For J. Lepkin

Learns That Mother Has Been Dead a Year When Money Returns

For years the filial devotion of J. Lepkin, Torrance tailor, has prompted him to send a gift of money to his old mother in Winnipeg. And for years he has received word of her love and gratitude that he always remembers. And so this year, with Mothers' Day approaching, Mr. Lepkin mailed an envelope containing money to the fine old mother that bore him and with whom he landed in New York from Russia seventeen years ago.

But Mothers' Day this year will not be a happy one for Mr. Lepkin.
For yesterday his envelope came back to him with a note from his brothers, saying that "mother died a year ago, but we kept word of it from you so that you would not grieve."

She was 75 years old last May—this mother of four sons—and the tie of love between her and her son now in Torrance was most strong of all. The brothers, Simon, Alex and Sam, knew that he would be torn with sadness if he knew of his mother's death. So when she passed away on May 31, last year, they were reluctant to send word of her passing to Torrance.

Mothers' Day will not be a happy one for J. Lepkin.

Foley Resignation Is Not Presented

The expected resignation of Trustee Tom Foley was not presented at Tuesday night's meeting of the Board of Trustees. By the law, according to City Attorney P. G. Briney, Mr. Foley has 90 days in which to resign, the period starting at the date of his removal from Torrance.

Reports that Charles Raymond would be appointed to fill the vacancy would not be confirmed or denied by members of the board.
